

To maximize funded accounts in futures and forex, you could follow a strategic progression that involves moving from smaller, less costly programs to those with higher potential payouts and larger account sizes:

Step 1: Start with Futures Trading

- Topstep or My Funded Futures: Begin with futures trading since these platforms are generally more affordable for initial funding.
  - Topstep offers the Trading Combine, where you can earn a funded account with up to $150,000 in capital by meeting certain profitability and risk management targets. Once you've demonstrated consistency and profitability, you can secure payouts. For example, securing five winning days with $200/day can lead to a $5,000 payout.
  - My Funded Futures provides similar opportunities with potentially uncapped withdrawals, no daily loss limits, and a flexible max drawdown, which can be appealing for those starting with less capital or experience.

Step 2: Transition to Forex with FTMO

- After securing a payout from your futures account, move to FTMO, which is known for its reliability and offers funding up to £200,000 on a demo account.
  - The FTMO Challenge involves two phases where you need to achieve profit targets while adhering to risk management rules. Once you pass both phases, you're eligible for a funded account. With a 5% profit target on a £200,000 account, reaching that could mean a £10,000 payout, assuming you maintain the necessary risk profile. FTMO is praised for its structured evaluation process and educational resources.

Step 3: Expand to Maven and Funding Pips

- Utilize the profits from FTMO to further diversify your funded trading opportunities:
  - Maven Trading might be your next step, known for its competitive profit splits and account sizes. It caters to skilled traders looking for substantial leverage and capital, offering up to $100,000 in funding.
  - Funding Pips provides another avenue for forex traders, with account sizes up to $300,000. They are noted for their trader-friendly policies, like no daily loss limits in some programs, which could suit traders with aggressive strategies.

This strategy involves starting with a less costly entry into funded trading, using the gains to fund your progression into larger, more diverse trading environments. Each step builds on the last, providing a pathway to increase your trading capital, experience, and potential profit while managing risk through the structured evaluation processes of each firm. Remember, success in these programs depends significantly on your trading strategy, discipline, and ability to adapt to the specific rules of each prop firm.
